Will you keep it for me until I return? Certainly, replied the neighbor. I will guard it with great care. In both paragraphs the writer is discussing the care of the treasure. In the first paragraph he has placed the conversation of the first merchant and the words that make the meaning of the conversation clear. In the second paragraph he has given the conversation of the second merchant and the words that tell who is speaking. In stories containing conversation, a paragraph is usually given to the words of each speaker each time that he speaks. When very brief descriptions or explanations accompany the words of a speaker, these descriptions or explanations are included in the paragraph with the speaker's words. WRITING AN ORIGINAL CONVERSATION 149 In the first paragraph above, about The Two Merchants, what are the speaker's words? What explanation accompanies them? In the second paragraph, what are the speaker's words? What explanation accompanies them? Read the story, The Two Merchants (page 78), telling the reason for each paragraph division; that is, give the topic of each paragraph. Try to give each topic in a complete sentence, thus: 1. A Persian merchant, about to set off on a journey, intrusted his treasure to a neighbor. 2. The neighbor accepted the trust. 3. Hoping the merchant would never return, he stole the treasure. 4. After several months, the merchant called for his treasure....
